Arborist inspection Large Mesquite tree in front yard.

The tree is large, with a firmly attached base with no surface roots showing, and no disturbed or cracked concrete in the nearby area that would be evidence of root invasion. I did not see any mistletoe infection nor any dead wood of over 1" in diameter. I saw no broken limbs nor evidence of decay in the trunk or lateral limbs.

The top canopy is somewhat thick but does not need immediate attention. There are very little leaves brushing the roof, at this time, as the tree has been severely lifted in the past. The tree seems firmly rooted in the ground and is healthy. No evidence of disease was present.

I did recommend that in October the tree may need some canopy thinning after most of the summer growth has been achieved. This would allow winds to blow freely through the tree rather than limbs being subject to breakage from the inability of the wind to go through the branches.

Summary:

The tree is healthy, is growing and seems happy in its present site. It is a large tree, but that is supposed to be the goal of having a shade tree in the west side of the home, to grow into a large shade tree. I did not recommend any tree service at this time, as I saw none was needed.
